

Community Building in the New Deal Era: Migrant Workers, the Federal Government, and the Politics of Social Reform

Veronica Martinez-Matsuda

*Doctoral Candidate in American History with a portfolio in Mexican American Studies,
University of Texas at Austin and Andrew W. Mellon Humanities Fellow,
Department of History, Bryn Mawr College*

During the Great Depression the U.S. federal government developed what is arguably one of the most provocative and far-reaching programs for farm workers undertaken to this date. The Migratory Labor Camp Program, which lasted through the Second World War, aimed to provide migrant families with housing while transforming significant social, cultural, and personal matters of their everyday lives.

When: Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Time: 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.

Where: Bryn Mawr College, Graduate School of Social Work & Social Research
300 Airdale Rd., Bryn Mawr, PA

R.S.V.P. 610-520-2605 or probinson@brynmawr.edu

Lecture is FREE and open to the public.
Light Supper at 6:00 p.m.

Special thanks to The G. Mildred and A. Foster Scott Foundation for providing funding for this Lecture Series and bringing a diverse range of speakers to the Graduate School of Social Work and Social Research at Bryn Mawr College. For additional information on the above lecture and other CCFWB initiatives visit www.brynmawr.edu/childandfamily.

The 2008-2009 Scott Lecture Series is open to all students, faculty, alumnae/i and general public.

Because seating is limited, we ask that you

R.S.V.P. to 610-520-2605 or probinson@brynmawr.edu