
Policy on confidentiality of individual-level data collected by Bryn Mawr's Office of Institutional Research

Rationale for confidentiality policy

The operations of the Office of Institutional Research frequently require the collection of survey responses from individual members of the campus, including faculty, students, and staff.

To comply with federal and institutional regulations pertaining to the protection of the confidentiality of data collected from human subjects, this confidentiality policy was designed to meet two important goals of Bryn Mawr's Office of Institutional Research with regard to such data collection efforts.

- A. To protect the confidentiality of all personal information provided to the Office in the context of data collection and analysis for institutional research purposes.
- B. To store such information in a manner that will enable the Office to link or merge such responses at the individual level with other sources of institutional data for the purposes of institutional research. These data will be stored for as long as they remain relevant to current strategic planning issues at the college.

Measures to ensure confidentiality of individual-level survey responses

1. The database(s) containing the survey responses will be maintained on a computer hard drive that is password-protected and located in the Office of Institutional Research.
2. All databases storing individual-level survey responses containing fields that uniquely identify individuals will be password-protected with a second, different password known only to staff in the Office of Institutional Research.
3. Individual respondents will not be identified in any presentations of survey results.
4. Summary results will not be reported in any presentations of survey results for groups smaller than five individuals.

5. Under no circumstances will individual-level survey responses be made available to anyone outside of the Office of Institutional Research (including senior executives of the College, as well as the President).

Consortial surveys

Bryn Mawr belongs to the COFHE consortium of colleges, to the HEDS consortium of colleges, as well as other data-sharing consortia. These consortia occasionally conduct surveys of individuals, in which Bryn Mawr participates. Some of these surveys optionally request identifying information of respondents.

The Consortium staff typically process the survey responses, including the fields uniquely identifying respondents. However, these personnel adhere to a strict policy on confidentiality.

Within the Office of Institutional Research, handling of datasets associated with any such surveys will adhere to all the policies described above for Bryn Mawr-specific surveys.
