“Bryn Mawr is a place where women claim an education.”

— ANNE CLAIRE GRAMMAR ’16
The centerpiece of a Bryn Mawr education will always be the College’s exceptional academic programs in the humanities, sciences, social sciences, and arts. Our innovative curriculum, including 360° Course Clusters and Praxis, integrates rigorous coursework and complex problem-solving in the classroom and the community.

Our partnerships with Haverford College, Swarthmore College, and the University of Pennsylvania provide students with unlimited opportunities to explore their passions. Through conversation and collaboration with faculty and peers, students become critical thinkers and leaders in their personal and professional pursuits.
At Bryn Mawr, the opportunities for students are boundless. Whether playing on Applebee Field, relaxing on Merion Green, or exploring Philadelphia, Bryn Mawr students forge connections with each other and the greater community.

Our unique traditions build a strong sense of belonging that is unparalleled and lifelong. With the country’s oldest Self Government Association (SGA) and our Honor Code, students create a sense of autonomy while building an environment based on trust and respect for each other. Students actualize their passions beyond the classroom through student-run clubs and organizations. Bryn Mawr’s close-knit community fosters lifelong leadership and a true sense of self.
BE BRILLIANT

WHERE WOMEN LEAD

Our students value opportunities to lead and make meaningful contributions within their communities. With opportunities for research, service, and experiential learning, Bryn Mawr students discover and strengthen individual leadership skills. Learning beyond the classroom helps students develop strategies for teamwork and big-picture thinking.

Women’s college grads 1.5x more likely to attend graduate school

27% more likely to be in student government at a women’s college

470 students participated in civic engagement
Bryn Mawr’s rolling campus covers 111 acres in suburban Philadelphia. Our residential community houses 91% of students across all four years.
A Bryn Mawr education is a global education. Through our international student population, global curriculum, and worldwide alumnae network, students gain a broader perspective of the world around them, whether they are studying overseas or sitting in a classroom on campus.

Bryn Mawr students value diversity and the ability to leave their mark in communities around the world, from studying abroad in France, to trekking to Cuba in a 360° Course Cluster, to starting a career halfway across the globe in Japan.
PATHWAYS TO PURPOSE.

Bryn Mawr prepares students for not one path, but many. Internships and other professional opportunities help students gain the experience and skills necessary to make intentional decisions about their futures.

“Here, you’re really encouraged to pursue your real passion, no matter if it is art, if it is computer science, if it is any kind of language — you are really encouraged to do what you want to do.”
— YUE YANG ’16

“It’s really nice to get to meet people from all over the world, and to get their input on different things that are happening around the world. Their ideas may not always agree with yours, but that’s a part of learning.”
— NAZIFA TABASSUM ’18

“Bryn Mawr is a place where you can come as you are — and grow into whatever you want to be.”
— KATE PELLEGRINI ’17
We’re guessing a women’s college wasn’t even on your radar. That’s what many of our graduates would tell you. They will also tell you that attending a women’s college was a transformative and enlightening experience. Since opening its doors in 1885, Bryn Mawr College has empowered women through academic engagement, leadership opportunities, and community involvement in the classroom and beyond. Bryn Mawr continues to offer women an opportunity to learn in a space where they can explore their true passions and be in a world without unconscious bias. Simply put, Bryn Mawr connects women — to ideas, to opportunities, to one another, and to the world.
