THE WILSON-STERN BOOK OF LAW SCHOOL LISTS

Information On ABA-Approved Law Schools

By

Edward M. Stern, Assistant Dean for Pre-Law Advising at Boston University and Gerald L. Wilson, Senior Associate Dean at Duke University
As Editors of this publication, we continue to try to provide to both prelaw advisors and prelaw students the most current and useful information possible. In the spring of this year we conducted our annual survey of ABA accredited law schools in the United States in order to update these lists of law school academic programs, clinical programs, available scholarships, admission policies and other information. Two notes, both caveats, should be added here. First, this is really a reference book, a ready reference, we hope. Individual schools should be contacted for more information. Second, both advisors and students should be cautious when selecting a law school on the basis of one or just a few factors such as specialized programs, joint-degree programs, salary ranges, student organizations, etc. For the most part, a legal education is a general education in law and specialization occurs after law school. Applicants should look at the total program presented by a law school and see which school in its totality seems to best meet their needs.

We hope that users of this book will also recognize that these lists are compiled from information received from law schools and that they are, to coin a phrase, “subject to change without notice.”

A very special thank you is owed to Terry Wilkerson who supervised this project this year. This book could not have been completed without her efforts. The editors are greatly appreciative of her abilities and grace throughout this project.

Please note that the authors do not endorse, support or acknowledge the effectiveness or utility of any commercial test preparation or advising program.

LAW SCHOOL ACADEMIC PROGRAMS

Some law schools offer graduate work in a general field of law while others have graduate programs in a specific area of the law. A number of law schools have joint degree programs whereby a student may combine his/her legal studies with course work in another discipline. In these cases some of the credits from the law courses will count toward the graduate degree in the other discipline while some of the graduate work will fulfill a part of the law degree. When these programs are available the individual will generally be able to complete the two degrees in a year less than if they were taken separately. A large number of law schools give special emphasis to certain areas of the law but not enough work to warrant a graduate program.

The information on the following pages has been compiled over time and is updated annually from the responses to a questionnaire submitted to the law schools by Dr. Gerald Wilson of Duke University and Dean Edward Stern of Boston University. Again thanks are due to Terry Wilkerson, who shepherded this year’s project from beginning to end.

Many schools change their programs from one year to another. After finding the special program in which a student is interested, attention should be given to the website and/or the most recent bulletin of that school. Several schools have indicated that a student might be able to work out another joint degree program on an individual basis.

Two notes may be helpful to the reader:

First, when there is an asterisk (*) beside a school, the information came from the ABA - LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools rather than from a response to the Stern/Wilson Survey.

Second, when two asterisks () appear beside a school, the entry applies to graduates of foreign law schools only.

D. AREAS OF EMPHASIS WITHOUT A GRADUATE DEGREE

Advisors and students should note that the primary function of law school curriculum is to offer a general education in law. In most cases, specialization in one area of the law comes with on the job experience after law school. Caution should be exercised in using this list of “Areas of Emphasis” as the primary factor in choosing a law school. Students should also be aware of the possibility that too narrow specialization may limit job opportunities.

This section of the Book of Law School Lists attempts to give a listing of areas in which clinical programs are offered. Given the great variety of clinical programs and the even greater variety of titles given to these programs, we believe that it is more useful to simply identify areas. Often these clinical programs assume the form of internships or externships. Specific details about each program can be found in individual law school bulletins or in the ABA-LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools.

Two notes may be helpful to the reader:

First, where there is an asterisk () beside a school, the information came from the ABA-LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools rather than from a response to the Wilson/Stern survey.*

Second, the list concludes with a category simply called “Various.” Resisting the temptation to label it “Miscellaneous,” the editors listed schools which indicate that they have clinical programs but did not offer specific information. In many of these cases, clinical programs are arranged individually according to the needs of the student and the opportunities available. Students and advisors should examine information provided individually by these schools.

A. PRO BONO WORK REQUIREMENT/PUBLIC SERVICE REQUIREMENT

Albany Law Schools: Yes. Albany Law’s pro bono requirement mirrors that of the New York State Bar requirement for admission. All students must undertake at least 50 hours of law-related service over the course of three years. Pro bono activity is robust at Albany Law and programs include animal law, human trafficking, prisoner rights, child advocacy, civil rights, elder law, LGBT rights, veterans rights and many more.

Appalachian School of Law: The Externship requirement (three credit hours) allows students to apply the skills learned in the core curriculum. Students typically take this course during the summer following their first year of studies at the Law School. Students work for a total of approximately 225 unpaid hours in a judges’ chambers, public law office, or public interest organization under the direct supervision of a licensed attorney.

University of Arkansas School of Law: No. While not required, students who achieve 50 or more hours of pro bono work receive recognition at graduation and a designation on their transcripts.

Baylor Law School: While not required, Baylor Law encourages students to participate in pro bono and public service work while in law school. Students may opt to participate in our formal Pro Bono and Public Service Program by submitting an Intent to participate form and completing the requisite number of hours of pro bono and public service work during their time in law school. There are 5 tiers to the program: Pro Bono Pledge Completed (50 hours at graduation), Bronze (75 hours at graduation), Silver (150 at graduation), Gold (200 hours at graduation), and Platinum/designation as a Public Interest Fellow (224 hours at graduation plus required coursework).

Boston University School of Law encourages students to join the Pro Bono Program, which gives students the opportunity to dedicate their developing legal skills to unmet legal needs in the Boston area, throughout the United States and around the world. Through the Pro Bono Program, J.D. student provide 50 hours of law-related service during their three years at BU Law (LL.M. students provide 12 hours) to organizations dedicated to underrepresented groups and or social issues. Upon completion, students receive a notation on their law school transcripts confirming participation in the program.

University at Buffalo School of Law: The School of Law is prepared to help students who plan to sit for the New York Bar exam to meet the state’s mandatory 50-hour pro bono admission requirement. The School provides for-credit pro bono opportunities, and will identify not-for-credit opportunities available in the Western New York region. The School’s highly-competitive Pro Bono Scholars Program gives third-year law students the opportunity to take the February New York State Bar before they graduate, then work full-time in a pro bono placement while taking one course for their final semester of law school. The School’s Buffalo Public Interest Law Program raises money to support students who work in the public interest each summer during law school. BPLIP also hosts networking events for students to meet public-interest employers from neighboring communities. The organization is affiliated with Lawyers for Learning and participates in the Student Bar Association’s Volunteer Service Days.

University of California—Davis
The Pro Bono Program
This is a certificate program designed to enhance our educational process. Pro bono work is volunteer legal work performed without compensation or academic credit and under the supervision of an attorney. Students can volunteer in public interest organizations, government agencies or courts.

Participation in the program also provides students recognition for their community service; upon completion of 50 or more hours of pro bono work, students receive a Pro Bono Program certificate.

Public Service Law Program
The Public Service Law Program is an academic certification program developed for students seeking public service careers. Students are eligible to enroll at any time throughout their law school but are encouraged to enroll in soon after registering for an approved course or obtaining a qualifying position. Certificate requirements include academic and experiential components. To receive a certificate, students must fulfill the academic and experiential components of the program.

University of California—Irvine
The University of California, Irvine School of Law is deeply committed to the performance of public service work. We expect that our students and faculty will be regularly engaged in public service work throughout their careers.

Public service work, of course, can take many forms and reflect many values, including activities such as helping those who cannot afford legal services and working for public interest and government organizations. We encourage our students and faculty to set yearly public service goals similar to those expected of practicing attorneys.
Cardozo School of Law
Cardozo has a wide variety of opportunities for students to be involved in pro bono projects. Public service work is an integral part of the fabric of the Cardozo community. Cardozo does not have mandatory pro bono requirements, though the New York bar requires 50 hours of pro bono work to be eligible for admission to the bar.

Case Western Reserve University
Encourages all law students to participate in pro bono work and recognizes those who complete a minimum of 50 qualifying pro bono hours by April 1 of their 3L year. To qualify, Pro Bono Work must be (1) law related; (2) supervised or approved by an attorney; (3) provided to the client free of charge or at a substantially reduced rate; (4) uncompensated and not for credit; and (5) provided to underrepresented persons, interest, or communities on behalf of a not-profit or government organization. Recognition will include a certificate signed by the Dean; an annual recognition event for graduating students who have satisfied the pro bono hours minimum requirement; and, recognition in the Commencement program. The graduating student(s) who complete the greatest number of qualifying pro bono hours will receive the Pro Bono Graduating Student of the Year Award and recognition at the Commencement ceremony.

Catholic University of America
The Columbus School of Law encourages students to engage in pro bono work through the CUA Law Pro Bono Challenge. CSL students pledge to complete 2550, or 75+ hours of pro bono service during their law school tenure and are recognized accordingly at an annual reception and upon graduation.

Charleston School of Law
Regardless of a student’s path after graduation, part of the Charleston School of Law’s mission is to instill in students the value of public service. Students at the Charleston School of Law are required to perform 50 hours of pro bono work under the supervision of a licensed attorney before graduation. Generally, students will receive pro bono credit when a student performs law related work without pay or academic credit for a public interest attorney or for a private attorney when he or she has taken a case on a pro bono or appointed basis. A public interest attorney is an attorney employed by an organization that is educational, charitable, governmental or nonprofit in nature. At a minimum, tenure and non-tenure track faculty must meet the school’s institutional pro bono requirement.

University of Colorado
University of Colorado encourages pro bono activities by a voluntary Public Service Pledge program. Students who complete 50 hours of law-related public service work in law school will be recognized at graduation and work will be reflected on transcript.

Columbia University
Every candidate for a J.D. degree must devote 40 hours to public interest field work between the start of the second year of law school and the end of the third year as a prerequisite for graduation. Work will qualify if it is uncompensated (financially or by academic credit), public interest or public service law-related work, broadly defined and regardless of political orientation.

Concordia University School of Law
Concordia University School of Law. “Servant leadership” is one of the founding principles behind Concordia University School of Law. To that end, our students are not only encouraged to provide numerous hours of pro bono work, it is mandatory. And while the requirement is for each student to complete 50 hours of law-related public service prior to graduation, the vast majority go well past that minimum number of hours. Through community service, students hone their skills by giving back to people in need. Serving the underserved is what Concordia University School of Law is all about.

Cornell University
The Public Interest Law Union and the Office of Public Service can help you start building your commitment to pro bono service during law school. The purpose of the Public Service Challenge is to provide school-wide recognition of Cornell Law Students who devote time to public service activities. Students who participate in the Public Service Challenge will receive a Certificate from Dean Stewart Schwab upon each level of completion.

University of Denver
Public Interest
50 hours during law school tenure

DePaul College of Law recognizes the intrinsic value of pro bono and community service work and is committed to shaping lawyers with a lifelong commitment to pro bono work and serving others. Thus, while not required, DePaul College of Law encourages all students to complete and report at least 50 hours of service during their time at DePaul. Students who meet this 50-hour aspirational goal qualify for a prestigious service award presented at a reception in the spring.

University of District of Columbia School of Law
Through Duke University’s Pro Bono Project, students provide volunteer legal services in individual areas of interest. While not required, participation is strongly encouraged.

Duke University
Public Interest and Public Service Certificate: The Certificate in Public Interest and Public Service Law (“PIPS” Certificate) is a JD Certificate program for students committed to a legal career in public service. Enrolled students complete curricular requirements and are assigned peer and faculty mentors in order to assist them in selecting academic, clinical and experiential courses that will help them develop competencies necessary toward achieving their professional aspirations. Students in the program benefit from a community of peers, faculty, administrators and Duke Law alumni committed to supporting them as they pursue careers in public interest and public service.

Pro Bono Pledge: participation in the Pro Bono Project is voluntary but all students are encouraged to participate. Students are invited to sign the Pro Bono Pledge in which they commit to contribute a minimum of 50 hours of law-related community service, including pro bono or clinic field work, during their time as students.

Florida State does have a pro bono requirement. Students must fulfill 20 hours of pro bono/public service work during the second or third year of law school.

Georgetown University Law Center encourages students to participate in pro bono activities through the Pro Bono Challenge. Students who perform at least 75 hours of law-related pro bono work during their years at Georgetown are recognized at Graduation.

Georgia State University: To encourage and support students who provide pro bono services to the community, the College of Law has adopted the Georgia State University College of Law Pro Bono Recognition Program. Pro bono activities include not only those that ensure adequate legal services for moderate and low income individuals but efforts that enhance the capacity of law and legal institutions to do justice, and activities in the local community that promote justice. The College of Law’s pro bono recognition program is designed to encouraged students to engage in such activities while in law school and thus conduct themselves in accordance with highest values and standards of the legal profession.

Hamline University School of Law has a pro bono service requirement of 24 hours over the course of law school.

Harvard University has a pro bono requirement of 50 hours over the course of law school. On average, students complete approximately 600 hours of pro bono work before they graduate.

The University of Hawaii | William S. Richardson School of Law: Except for transfer students, law students who enroll in the William S. Richardson School of Law must complete 60 hours of law-related pro bono legal service, including law-related public service activities, as a graduation requirement. Transfer students must complete a total of 10 hours of pro bono legal service, including law-related service activities, for every semester enrolled in the William S. Richardson School of Law.

The Maurice A. Deane School of Law—Hofstra University offers students opportunities to engage in pro bono service on a not-for-credit basis. The Public Service Certificate Program provides students the opportunity to volunteer with nonprofit organizations, governmental agencies and private law firms, or practitioners doing pro bono work. Students who participate receive a certificate from Hofstra Law recognizing their public service. The student-run Unemployment Action Center is a nonprofit corporation that offers free advice and representation to persons denied unemployment benefits.

The University of Idaho College of Law is committed to providing opportunities for law students that emphasize the value and habit of service to the community. Accordingly, all students are required to perform 40 hours of uncompensated law-related pro bono service as a condition of graduation. The purpose of this pro bono requirement is to instill in students a commitment to their responsibility as lawyers to give back to the community and promote justice by assisting the underserved and underrepresented. As a result of the program, students gain practical legal experience, clients are served, and legal service providers gain valuable assistance. Students are given the opportunity to fulfill their public service requirements in a wide range of settings, including legal service organizations, government agencies, private firms (pro bono cases), non-profits, and legislative offices.

The Pro Bono Project at Indiana University Maurer School of Law is a cooperative program between the Law School and the bar and bench of the surrounding area to provide civil legal assistance to people who could not otherwise afford it. Students are assigned to work closely with volunteer lawyer on a wide variety of matters. The school has established an aspirational goal of 60 hours of pro bono service for students during their time in law school.

Indiana University McKinney School of Law encourages students to take part in our Pro Bono Program, where you'll gain valuable hands-on experience while helping some of society’s most underrepresented populations. Students who complete at least 50 hours of pro bono work during the course of their law school career will receive a Pro Bono notation on their transcript, receive a certificate, and participate in a recognition reception at the conclusion of their law school career. These students will also be listed in the graduation program as a participant in the Pro Bono Program.

The John Marshall Law School: There is not a specific pro bono requirement. However, students are required to complete at least three credit hours of clinical or externship work, both of which normally involve public service or pro bono work. Simulation courses do not satisfy this requirement.

University of Kansas: No Pro Bono requirement, but students are recognized for pro bono achievements.
Lewis & Clark Law School does not mandate pro bono or community service hours. However, for students who have volunteered 30 hours a year in either pro bono or community service are awarded with the “Pro Bono and Community Service Award,” in the spring of every year and this award is also reflected on the student’s academic transcript. Students may earn this award for every year in which they are an enrolled student.

Liberty University School of Law: Liberty University School of Law has a long tradition of expecting and encouraging community service from its students in keeping with its mission “to affirm the Christian worldview and provide a practical expression of God’s love for mankind.” The law school does not mandate volunteerism; however, it is working to develop a culture of service among the law students, faculty, staff, and administration.

Loyola Law School—Los Angeles mandates 40 hours public service work beginning entering class of Fall 94 and thereafter.

The University of Louisville—Brandeis School of Law has a pro bono/public service requirement. After completion of their first year and before their final semester of law school, students must perform a minimum of 30 hours of uncompensated public service work. Institutional support is provided in the form of a half-time director and a half-time assistant who help students in meeting this requirement by having over 300 locations identified as well as assisting students in establishing other locations according to their individual interest.

University of Maine School of Law’s faculty has adopted a voluntary student pro bono legal service standard under which every student is encouraged to provide a minimum of 80 hours of pro bono legal service prior to the time of graduation.

“Pro bono legal service” is defined as work involving the provision of legal services that is performed without either financial compensation or academic credit.

Examples include such work for legal services providers, individual lawyers providing pro bono service, social service agencies, low income organizations, civil rights organizations, environmental organizations, consumer organizations, and governmental agencies providing service to individual members of the public who are disadvantaged. Partisan political activity is not included in the definition of “pro bono legal services.” Students achieving 80 hours are recognized at graduation.

University of Maryland requires full-time day students to complete a public service requirement by taking one of a number of credit bearing courses in which students have substantial responsibility for providing legal assistance to poor persons or organizations representing the interest of poor persons. These courses:

- a) provide students with an experience (including direct professional contact with poor persons) on how the law operates in practice; and
- b) include regular classes in which the faculty member provides instruction that, when integrated with the practice experience, will help the students to understand, apply and critique theory and practice; and
- c) have a professional responsibility component.

University of Memphis Law School is committed to instill within its students the very heart of the legal profession — providing equal justice under the law. Because equal justice comes at a cost, lawyers have a unique and rewarding obligation to provide pro bono services to those unable to pay. Memphis Law’s Pro Bono Program is designed to nurture this ethical obligation and provide students with the opportunity to gain a practical, hands-on experience while helping improve the lives of the under-represented. Students are required to complete 40 hours of pro bono work in order to graduate.

University of Miami School of Law: There is no pro-bono requirement for graduation. However, Students who complete at least 75 hours of pro bono service while in law school will be recognized with an honor cord at graduation and will receive transcript notation.

University of Michigan Law School asks students to voluntarily commit to performing 50 hours of pro bono service while enrolled at Michigan Law, allowing students to connect their developing knowledge to the world outside the Law School and gaining valuable legal skills while helping an organization in our community meet the needs of underrepresented individuals. Students may choose from Law School-organized projects (ranging from those that provide legal assistance to local residents to projects that spotlight events across the nation and around the globe), or may organize their own projects. Graduating students performing at least 50 hours of pro bono work will receive a Certificate of Pro Bono Service from the Dean, recognition at an annual pro bono banquet, and acknowledgment during the Honors Convocation.

University of Missouri—Kansas City: We do have a pro bono service program.

University of Nebraska seeks to encourage and recognize volunteer legal service by second and third year students through the Pro Bono Initiative. Students completing 40 hours or more of approved, qualified pro bono work during their second and/or third years will receive a Dean’s certificate upon graduation.
New England Law | Boston: Pro bono opportunities are available to students, but are not required for graduation. Students engaged in volunteer public service legal work have two opportunities to earn recognition for their work. The first is New England Law’s own Public Service Transcript Notation Program, which gives qualifying students formal recognition on their law school transcript as well as the school’s Public Service Honor Roll. The second is the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court Pro Bono Honor Roll, which recognizes law students across Massachusetts who complete qualifying pro bono work.

University of Nevada, Las Vegas—William S. Boyd School of Law requires first-year students to participate in a community service program in which teams of students, working with Legal Aid Center of Southern Nevada prepare and conduct weekly workshops for unrepresented people on basic procedures in family or small claims court and on basic landlord/tenant law and bankruptcy law.

New York Law School: Applicants seeking to be admitted to the New York State bar on or after January 1, 2015 will need to demonstrate that they have completed 50 hours of qualifying pro bono work prior to submitting their applications for admission.

University of North Carolina: The Pro Bono Program tracks the number of hours completed by each law student in order to recognize outstanding pro bono service. Students completing fifty of more hours of pro bono service receive a letter from the Director of the Pro Bono Program and the Dean of the law school acknowledging the contribution they have made to our community. Those who do more than seventy-five hours of pro bono service while a law student are recognized by the North Carolina Bar Association at the public service reception held at the end of each school year in the law school Rotunda. Furthermore, students who complete one hundred or more hours of pro bono service are individually acknowledged at law school graduation. Students completing 50 or more hours during their law school career will receive special notations on their official transcripts.

Northeastern University School of Law: We have public interest requirement. This requirement can be fulfilled through a public interest Co-Op, completing a public interest clinical offering, completed 30 hours of uncompensated legal work in a public interest setting, or an independent study project of at least 3 credits. A majority of students fulfill this requirement through a public interest co-op.

Northern Illinois University College of Law: We do not have a pro bono requirement, but we encourage students to participate in pro bono projects, we offer a public interest certificate, and provide recognition for students who engage in 60 hours or more of pro bono work.

Northern Kentucky University Chase College of Law requires all students to complete 50 hours of pro bono service during their law school tenure. Students may satisfy the hourly requirement at one placement site, or may satisfy the requirement with several different projects involving fewer than 50 hours, so long as they ultimately complete a total of 50 hours of pro bono service. Fifty (50) hours is a minimum requirement; students are encouraged to perform additional hours if they so choose.

Northwestern University: We expect all students to complete at least 40 hours of community service work during their J.D. degrees.

The Nova Southeastern University College of Law Pro Bono Honor Program recognizes students who work pro bono for the public interest while enrolled in law school. Students completing a certain number of service hours will be awarded this graduation honor. The program is part of the Public Interest Law Center, which provides information and resources to students interested in working for the public interest and acknowledges that work.

Quinnipiac Law does not have a “pro-bono” requirement for graduation, although some of our experiential learning courses do involve providing pro-bono services, doing so is not mandatory.

The University of Pennsylvania Penn Law aims to promote an ethic of service in all students while encouraging them to develop professional skills and enhance their legal education. The centerpiece of Penn Law’s pledge to service is a graduation obligation of 70 hours of pro bono legal work. As the hub of public interest activities at Penn Law, the Toll Public Interest Center coordinates a wide range of pro bono initiatives, including internal pro bono projects and the many external opportunities that students pursue. Penn Law students, pro bono opportunities are limitless. Students can participate in more than 30 pro bono projects (internal opportunities) or partner with non-profit or government agencies for pro bono internships (external opportunities).

Roger Williams University School of Law—requires all students to complete 50 hours of law-related public service over the course of their J.D. Program.

Rutgers Law School: The Pro Bono Program places students in a wide variety of public interest or public service law offices where students perform a minimum of 35 hours of service. The program is voluntary.

St. John’s University School of Law: The Pro Bono Scholars Program allows students to sit for the bar exam in February of their final semester and then complete 12 weeks of full-time pro bono service at an approved clinic. Students receive 14 credits for the semester.
Saint Louis University School of Law does not have a pro bono or public service requirement, however, students are strongly encouraged to participate in pro bono legal service prior to graduation. Pro bono work may be on behalf of a government agency, a non-profit organization or indigent individuals.

University of St. Thomas School of Law (MN): As a requirement for graduation, all students must complete fifty hours of public service during their three years of law school.

St. Thomas University requires its law students complete a minimum of 50 hours of pro bono work as a requirement for graduation. It is designed to give second and third year students legal experience under the supervision of lawyers in a variety of non-profit offices, government agencies, and law firms.

Santa Clara University: Students seeking to earn the Public Interest Law Certificate must complete 50 hours of community volunteer work promoting public interest and social justice.

Seattle University School of Law invites all law students to pledge to complete at least 100 hours for full-time students or 50 hours for part-time students of legal pro bono and community volunteer work before they graduate.

University of South Carolina: While many members of the school are actively involved in the pro-bono program, this is not a graduation requirement. More information can be found at: https://www.sc.edu/study/colleges_schools/law/internal/department/pro_bono/student/sc_bar_pro_bono_program.php.

South Texas College of Law: The College’s Pro Bono Honors Program seeks to encourage professionalism both by providing pro bono public service opportunities for students and by recognizing this service through a formal certificate program. Students enrolled in this voluntary certificate program must perform at least 50 service hours at a pre-approved placement or seek approval for an alternative placement from the program director.

SMU Dedman School of Law requires all students entering the J.D. Program in the Fall of 1993 or thereafter to complete 30 hours of work in approved law-related public service placements.

Stetson University College of Law: As a requirement for graduation, each student must complete 60 hours of public service.

Syracuse University College of Law Recognition for Pro Bono and Community Service: In recognition of the commitment to pro bono and community service work by students of the Syracuse University College of Law, the following recognition program has been created. Students who are in good academic standing and have completed at least 30 hours of pro bono and community service will receive special recognition at graduation. There are two categories of Pro Bono and Community Service Recognition Awards.

Blue Pro Bono Community Service Award: (complete the recommended 30 hours of service) Orange Pro Bono and Community Service Award: (exceed the recommended 30 hours of service by at least 1 full our).

In addition, the top three graduating students providing the most pro bono and community service hours shall be individually recognized.

Temple University Beasley School of Law: While Temple Law does not have a pro-bono requirement for graduation, our students typically engage in ample amounts of pro-bono work throughout their law school experience.

Texas A&M University School of Law: Each student must perform no less than thirty hours of pro bono work through a placement that has been pre-approved by the School of Law. The pro bono work may be commenced following the completion of the first year of law school, and must be completed prior to graduation. The student is responsible for selecting a placement, contacting that office, arranging to do the work, completing the work, and filling out all proper forms. The work must be law related; clerical work is appropriate only to the extent needed to carry out the overall legal task. The work must be uncompensated; students may not receive monetary compensation, academic credit, or other tangible benefits for performing the service. The work must be supervised by an attorney.

Thomas R. Kline School of Law, Drexel University: Every student must complete at least 50 hours of pro bono service prior to graduation. Students who provide 75+ hours of pro bono service receive recognition at graduation.

Touro Law Center: As a condition of graduation, every student must satisfy the Public Interest Law Perspective Requirement by successful completion of certain clinical programs or classroom courses or by certification of 40 hours of pro bono work.

Tulane Law School was the first in the country to institute a mandatory pro bono or a community service program. Since 1987, Tulane has required each graduating student to have performed 20 hours of supervised, uncompensated legal work for clients who could not otherwise afford assistance. In 2006 requirement was increased to 30 hours.
Valparaiso University School of Law adopted a pro bono requirement in 1988. Valparaiso law students must perform 40 hours of pro bono work supervised by an attorney. Students must complete the work after completion of 30 credit hours and prior to graduation. If 60 hours or more are completed, it will be noted on the student’s transcript.

University of Washington requires each student to complete 60 hours of public service legal work.

Washburn University School of Law: believes the legal profession is one of service and encourages students to participate in its Pro Bono Certificate Program to demonstrate a commitment to serving the community and to gain enhanced, practical legal experience. Students who perform 50 hours of pro bono service receive a Pro Bono Honors designation at graduation, and students who complete 100 hours of pro bono service receive a Distinguished Pro Bono Honors designation. The Washburn Law Pro Bono Program encourages students to understand and embrace their future professional obligation to provide legal services to individuals of limited means.

Washington University School of Law: Students are encouraged to participate in a Pro Bono Pledge and fulfill 50 hours of pro bono work before graduation. Our Public Service Advisory Board helps individual find service projects that are tailored to their interests. We have long-standing institutional connections with many organizations throughout the larger St. Louis community and beyond.

Western New England University School of Law: Yes. We require 20 hours of pro bono work.

Western State College of Law has a voluntary Public Service Program in which students use their legal skills to perform law-related work for the community and the underprivileged and are recognized for that work upon completing 40 hours of service.

Widener University Commonwealth Law School: Provides a special recognition at graduation for law students who perform a minimum of 60 hours of pro bono work over the course of their J.D. career.

Widener University Delaware Law School provides a special recognition at graduation for law students who perform a minimum of sixty hours of pro bono work over the course of the J.D career.

Willamette University College of Law: Willamette’s voluntary pro bono Honors Program enables student to enhance their learning experience by participating in community-based legal service projects. Students gain valuable hands-on involvement in the community by volunteering with a government agency or with a public interest or nonprofit organization. All Willamette law students are eligible to participate and receive pro bono Honors credit. Willamette Law has an optional pro-bono program.

William Mitchell College of Law: Provides a wide variety of volunteer options through the Minnesota Justice Foundations. Students who serve 50 or more hours through MJF or clinics receive a transcript certification.

Yale Law School has no Pro Bono Requirement
This section of the Book of Law School Lists contains a summary of specialized law school publications open for student participation.

In addition to the scholarly specialized publications listed in the next few pages, many law schools publish newspapers, newsletters and yearbooks. In most cases these are entirely student run.

Further information about these publications can be obtained by examining the individual school’s website and/or the school’s most recent bulletin or by consulting the ABA · LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools. Where designated by an asterisk (*), the information came from the Official Guide rather than a response to the Wilson/Stern survey.

3. Angela D. Dales Merit Scholarship Program for first-year students:
   • Merit Scholarships are awarded in the form of a credit against the tuition charged to the student who receives the award.
   • Eligibility for an award during the student's first year of Law School is determined based on the student's Law School Admissions Test (LSAT) score and undergraduate grade point average (UGPA) as determined by LSAC. Eligibility for retention of an award during the student's second and third years is determined based on the student's academic performance during Law School.
   • The Law School is able to award only a limited number of these scholarships, and scholarships will be awarded on a first-come, first-served basis. Applicants therefore are encouraged to complete their Law School application at the earliest possible date. An award is not finalized until the applicant has been accepted to the Law School and has paid his or her seat deposit.
   • Transfer students are not eligible for Merit Scholarships.

   Temple awards a number of scholarships based on merit, need and a combination of both, so it's difficult to separate the factors which go into the selection process and to provide specific information on the number of awards made in a specific academic year.

   Incoming students are eligible for a number of merit and need scholarships ranging from partial to full-time tuition. The faculty Admissions Committee makes recommendations for merit scholarship awards and student are not required to submit a separate application. The one exception is the Rubin-Public Interest Scholars Program which provides full and half tuition scholarships to student who will be pursuing a public interest legal career.

   Upper division students are considered for numerous scholarships based on a variety of factors including academic performance, financial need and contributions to the law school community.

   Need based scholarships are awarded to students who demonstrate significant financial need as determined by the Law School Financial Aid Office based on the information they supply on the Free Application for Federal Student Aid.

B. SCHOOLS OFFERING A SUMMER CONDITIONAL ADMISSION PROGRAM

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

University of Arkansas—Little Rock

Summer Conditional Admissions Program Description: Legal Education Advancement Project (LEAP) participants attend an immersive, six-week summer program at the UA Little Rock William H. Bowen School of Law. Participants are assigned a faculty advisor, engage in collaborative exercises, and take a non-credit course that requires considerable in-class and out-of-class work. Classes and activities are required all day Monday through Friday. LEAP is a full-time commitment and working during the program is prohibited.

Atlanta’s John Marshall Law School

Access to Law School Opportunity Program (ALSO): ALSO is designed to allow participants to demonstrate that their performance in college, the LSAT or both do not reflect their capability to succeed in law school. An applicant’s performance in the program will be considered with the balance of his or her application for the purpose of making an admission decision.

Campbell Law School

Approximately 50–75 students are given the opportunity to participate in our seven week performance-based admission program (P BAP). The students take two courses of three credit hours each. A final exam is given in each course. A student who receives a “B” in both courses is automatically admitted to the fall program. Students who do not meet this criteria, but who demonstrate potential for success in law school, will be placed on a waiting list for the fall program.

Concordia University School of Law

Concordia University School of Law offers an Admission by Performance (ABP) option, an innovative program designed to give promising law school candidates a different path to law school. When offered, the program is available to a limited number of applicants who show promise of success, but whose credentials might not qualify them for standard admission. Applicants accepted into the program have the opportunity to gain admission for the next available start term via their performance in a pair of four-week, no-credit courses - Introduction to Legal Discourse and Analysis, and Introduction to Contracts via online/live-streaming. Each course consists of eight three-hour class periods, followed by a final exam. Once the grading for each course is completed, the Admission Committee will meet to determine which students are to be admitted as J.D. candidates for the fall term. For more information, contact the Office of Admission at 208-639-5440 or lawadmission@cu-portland.edu.

University of Detroit Mercy

An 8 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes, Legal Writing and Criminal Law. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Approximately 20 students generally participate. The Special Summer Program (SSP) is operated for minority, disadvantaged, or disabled applicants who do not meet the minimum standards of the entering class, but show potential for the study of law. SSP applicants must have at least one LSAT score in the 15th percentile. Question 13 of the application asks the applicant if he/she would like to be considered for the SSP. In a separate statement, applicants must describe the circumstances that qualify him/her for the SSP. In case of a disability, the applicant is requested to provide documentation. To be eligible for matriculation in the fall, students of the program must pass the substantive criminal law course, pass the legal research and writing course, and receive the unanimous evaluation of the SSP faculty. The cost of the program is $500 for tuition and $18 for parking. The contact person for the program is Kimberly Jones, Director of Admissions, jonesk1@udmercy.edu.
University of the District of Columbia

A 3 week summer conditional admission program. Required classes are Legal Writing, Reasoning and Analysis (class and tutorials); Torts and Criminal Law or Contracts. Students do not receive credit for the summer classes. Approximately 8 to 16 students participate. Criteria for admission into the program varies, usually the LSAT and/or GPA are below the “accepted” numerical standards or the student’s writing or organizational skills may be of concern and below what is deemed acceptable. There is no special application procedure. The student must attend every class and complete every assignment and exam in order to meet the condition of his or her admission into the fall class. At the end of the program each student is provided with an evaluation of his or her performance in the program; they are also counseled about their progress and about areas in which they may need to improve. If appropriate the program director recommends that students participate in the Academic Support Program. There is no cost to the student for participating in the program. The contact person for the program is Associate Dean Laurie Morin, Academic Affairs; she can be reached at lmorin@udc.edu.

Florida Coastal School of Law

The Alternative Admission Model Program for Legal Education (AAMPLE®) is a performance-based admissions program that rewards students who demonstrate the desire, commitment, and level of achievement necessary to manage the rigors of law school. Students are required to take two law school courses selected from our regular law school curriculum and modified to provide the most accurate indication of a student’s potential for law school success. Students may choose to take the courses on-campus or online. Within each course, students will take two quizzes and a final exam. Students who successfully pass each course with a 2.5 GPA or higher are automatically accepted into the school’s Juris Doctor program. Florida Coastal offers the AAMPLE program twice a year—once in the summer for admission to our fall class and once in the fall for admission to our spring class. For more information, please contact Nicole Schumer, Assistant Director of Admissions, at nschumer@fcsl.edu.

Indiana University McKinney School of Law

McKinney School of Law participates in the Indiana Conference of Legal Education Opportunity (ICLEO). ICLEO is a state based program that helps minority, low income, or educationally disadvantaged college graduates pursue a law degree and a career in the Indiana legal community. The students selected participate in the 6 week ICLEO Summer Institute. The housing and course materials are provided and there is no tuition to participate. Students who successfully complete the program are certified as ICLEO Fellows and receive an annual stipend of $9,000 for up to 3 years upon enrolling in an Indiana law school. There is a separate application and selection process. For more information, please visit mckinneylaw.edu/admissions/jd/diversity.html.

Louisiana State University

Legal Methods course, successful completion, admission for Fall. Must have approval of Faculty Committee to enter summer program.

University of Louisville—Brandeis School of Law

Approximately 15 applicants given the opportunity to participate in a six-week course (Monday through Friday) designed to enhance their skills in order to improve their chances for success in law school. All who complete the work in a satisfactory (effort and performance are evaluated) manner are allowed to enter law school in the fall. Most, if not all, of the participants successfully matriculate each fall.

Loyola—New Orleans
University of Memphis

To help achieve diversity in the classroom, during the summer the University of Memphis School of Law operates the Tennessee Institute for Pre-Law (TIP) program. The TIP program is for Tennessee residents (and Border County residents) who are not admitted through the regular admissions process, but who show potential for the study of law and bring diversity to the class. Applicants who are admitted into TIP and successfully complete the summer program will be eligible for admission in the fall semester to the University of Memphis School of Law. The TIP portion of the application requests information on whether a student is a first-generation college graduate, foreign-born, or a first-generation U.S. citizen; whether a student is a graduate of a historically minority undergraduate institution; whether a student has a disability; or whether a student is or was economically disadvantaged. The required TIP supplemental statement asks the student to describe the circumstances that qualify the student for participation in the program and the way in which the student might contribute to diversity in the law school.

New York Law School

New York Law School offers an online 6-week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes: Fourth Amendment and Negotiable Instruments. Students do receive credit for the classes. Twenty seats are reserved in the program for those seeking admission to New York Law School. The admissions committee invites selected students to participate in the program. There is no special application procedure. In order for the student to matriculate into law school in the fall, the criteria are: 1) satisfactory participation, (2) no grade below a C in either class, and (3) a cumulative GPA of 2.5. This year, the program cost was $3500, but this figure is subject to change in the future. The contact person for the program is Ella Mae Estrada, Assistant Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid, ellamae.estrada@nyls.edu, 212.431.2888.

North Carolina Central University School of Law

Students selected to participate in the Performance–Based Admission Program (PBAP) spend two weeks in a classroom setting where they are given instruction in one substantive law course by experienced faculty members. Additionally, students learn basic skills: how to prepare for class; how to organize and outline course material; and how to answer legal questions. Applicants are evaluated through diagnostic testing, oral and written assignments and interviews. These evaluations determine whether the PBAP applicant will be admitted to the School of Law in the fall.

Nova Southeastern University

AAMPLE®, a six-week summer program with limited enrollment by invitation of the Admissions Committee. Students take two non-credit courses and are required to earn a specified GPA to guarantee admission for fall. Additional full-file review, including feedback from AAMPLE® faculty is given to those just below required GPA. Cost of the program is approximately $1,700 and it is not eligible for financial aid. Contact HYPERLINK "mailto:law-admission@nova.edu" law-admission@nova.edu or 954.262.6119 for more information.

University of Oklahoma

The 1LS (First-year Law Summer Start) Program is a summer program for a select group of admitted students that runs from late May to mid-July. The focus of the 1LS Program is to give a first look at law school and provide the opportunity to earn law school credits during the summer. Students will take a course typically offered in the fall of their first year of law school, and a Legal Methods class. Students participating in the 1LS Program benefit from the opportunity to begin law school early and lighten their course and final exam loads for the Fall semester.

Oklahoma City University

Two pass/fail courses.

Saint Louis University

The Summer Institute at Saint Louis University is designed to identify students who have experienced the effects of educational disadvantage. The Institute includes a substantive first semester course and a course in legal skills. The program lasts seven weeks, beginning in late May/early June and ending in mid-July. Students who successfully complete this program are accepted into the School of Law for the Fall semester. Limited to 25 students. Tuition and books are free.
St. Mary’s University

A 5 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes, Logic & Writing and Analytical Skills. Between 15–20 students participate in the program. They are recommended by the Admissions Committee from the general applicant pool, and selected by the Program Director. There is no special application procedure. In order to matriculate into law school in the fall, the student must be recommended for admission by the professors conducting the summer program after completion. The cost of the program is $2,000 for day students and $1,500 for evening students, subject to change.

St. Thomas University School of Law

Admitted students have the option, or are required to enroll in a two week course prior to entering their 1L year. Introduction to Legal Studies (ILS) gives students the opportunity to experience how a law school classroom is conducted, while also introducing them to the format and setting of the law school exam.

Seattle University School of Law

Seattle University School of Law: 7 week required attendance in the Access Admission Program. All students are considered full members of the entering class and guaranteed admission in fall.

University of South Dakota

A 6 week screening program which will yield 10 admits. Between 30–50 students participate in the program. Students are required to take two classes, Agency and Personal Property. Students are selected based on a completed file that is eligible to begin law school that fall; usually the only concern is in the numbers, either a low LSAT and/or GPA. Applicants cannot apply for the program; they are invited to participate after review of the law school application and supporting material. During the final week of the program, participants take an exam in each course, anonymously. The two exam scores are averaged, and those who have a minimum grade of 70 (mid-C) on EACH exam, AND whose scores rank in the top ten of the program are offered admission. The cost of the program is $1,000 plus books, and room & board. The contact person for the program is Jean Henriques, Admissions Officer, jhenriqu@usd.edu.

Syracuse University

A 3 week, summer program called Legal Education Opportunity Program (LEO) that is not a conditional admission program, but a program that provides and opportunity for students who may not have otherwise been offered admission. Students are required to take three classes, Introduction to Law and the Legal System, Legal Writing Workshop, and Legal Skills. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Between 20–30 students usually participate in the LEO program. Recognizing that numerical indicators are not always the best predictors of success in law school—even when considered in combination with other factors—the College of Law admits a limited number of students each year through the LEO program. There is no special application procedure. Students do not need to achieve set grades during this program, but need to successfully complete the program requirements and take an exam at the end of the three weeks. Tuition costs are covered for all LEO participants during the summer program. For more information, contact Melanie Rodriguez, Assoc. Director of Career Services, mcrdrguez@law.syr.edu

Texas Southern University

Special attention to non-quantifiable factors in addition to LSAT and GPA. Successful completion allows students to continue into first year.
Texas Tech University

A 4 week summer conditional admission program. Required courses change from year to year. Students receive credit for the summer classes. Approximately 20–25 students participate in the program. The Admissions Committee decides which students will be considered for this program and those that will be accepted for the program. It is designed for those with lower academic indicators, but additional information in the file indicates the ability to succeed in law school. There is no special application procedure. If accepted for the summer program, they must attend the summer program to proceed to the fall. There is no required grade point average from the summer to proceed to the fall. The current tuition rate is $334 for Texas residents and $580 for non-residents. Students will pay the current tuition rate and all tuition generated fees. Since these rates change from year to year, the applicant should check the university website for current information. The contact person for the program is Terence L. Cook, Assistant Dean for Admissions and Recruitment, terence.cook@ttu.edu.

Thomas M. Cooley Law School

The Professional Exploration Program (PEP) is a 5–8 day intensive program. This program is designed to give law school applicants who do not meet the minimum admissions requirements a chance to qualify for alternative admission. It also provides law school applicants the opportunity for self-exploration and discovery of strengths and weaknesses in their pursuit of a career. At the completion of the program, the students’ performance is evaluated by the PEP Committee. Students are notified by letter, three weeks after the program, as to the committee’s decision whether they’ve been offered admission to Thomas M. Cooley Law School.

University of Tulsa College of Law

All admitted first year law students have the option to begin law school in the summer. This program is not conditional.

Washburn University School of Law

Washburn Law participates in the Council for Legal Education Opportunity CLIC program, a national summer pre-law program. After finishing the program, up to five participants will be guaranteed admission to Washburn Law.

Widener University Delaware Law School

A 6 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes. Student participation varies from year to year. Criteria for admission is based on applicants who have displayed promise of success in legal studies even though they may have excelled in only one of the two principal standardized predictors of success—the Law School Admission Test and the undergraduate grade point average. The personal statement, letters of recommendation and all materials submitted in support of the application are considered. There is no special application procedure. Participants who obtain a 2.3 cumulative grade point average in the program are offered admission to the fall class. The cost of the program is $1000. Successful program participants receive a $5,000 renewable tuition scholarship upon their fall enrollment.

E. SCHOOLS PERMITTING PRE-SELECTION OF STUDENTS TO BE INTERVIEWED BY FIRMS

Schools listed below unless otherwise noted, permit firms interviewing on campus to pre-select 100% of the candidates they will interview. Only schools responding to the Wilson/Stern survey were included.

University of Alabama
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers pre-select candidates.

Albany Law School
Employers pre-select candidates. On campus interviews are scheduled based on 100% employer prescreening.

American University

University of Arizona
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers are permitted to pre-select 100%.

Arizona State University College of Law
May pre-select 100%.

University of Arkansas—Little Rock

Atlanta’s John Marshall Law School

Baylor Law School

Boston College Law School
While employers may pre-select all candidates, they are strongly encouraged to participate in an interview lottery system to ensure that all interested students have a broad range of interviewing opportunities. Over 90% of employers participate in our lottery system.

Boston University School of Law
All students are permitted to submit to all employers. Employers preselect 100% of candidates for interviews.

Brooklyn Law School
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. While employers are permitted to pre-select 100% of the candidates, they are strongly encouraged to reserve interview slots for students ranked below their stated criteria so that a larger number of interested students have interviewing opportunities.

University of California—Davis

California Western University

Capital University

Benjamin N. Cardozo (Yeshiva)
Employers are permitted to pre-select 85%.

Case Western Reserve University
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers are permitted to pre-select 100%.

Catholic University of American
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers are permitted to pre-select 100% of candidates whom they will interview.

Charleston School of Law
Employers may pre-select 100%.

H. WHAT SCHOOLS DO WITH MULTIPLE LSAT SCORES

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

University of Akron
If an applicant has multiple LSAT scores, we will consider the highest score.

University of Alabama
Highest score considered.

Albany Law School
Highest score considered.

American University
Admission Committee reviews all scores, but typically considers higher score for admission purposes.

Appalachian School of Law
Highest valid LSAT score taken.

University of Arizona
Most scores are averaged unless they are 10 points or more apart. If they are, we use the higher score.

Arizona State University

College of Law
The highest score is used in all reporting and given more significant consideration. Admissions committee sees and reviews all scores.

University of Arkansas—Fayetteville
We take the highest of the final three scores.

Atlanta's John Marshall Law School
The Admissions Committee will see all reported scores and give substantial weight to the highest score.

University of Baltimore
Highest score used.

Baylor Law School
Highest score considered.

Boston College Law School
Adheres tot he ABA policy of reporting the higher LSAT score, but considers all scores in the file review process. The admissions committee will consider addenda explaining differences in scores.

Boston University School of Law
Highest score considered.

University of Baltimore
If more than 7 points apart and GPA is 3.0 plus, take highest.

Brooklyn Law School
The Committee on Admissions sees all reported scores and give substantial weight to the highest score.

University at Buffalo School of Law
While the Admissions Committee will see all reported scores, we place considerably more weight on the highest LSAT score.

University of California—Berkeley
Take highest score.

University of California—Davis
The Admission Committee will use the high score for purposes of a final admission decision, however it has access to all scores earned within the past five years. In exceptional cases where there is a significant difference exists between scores, applicants may choose to provide a brief addendum of explanation. The highest score will be the recorded score in all reports and publications.

University of California—Hastings College of the Law
Highest score used.

University of California—Irvine
The admission committee will see all reported but will count the highest as the official score.

University of California—Los Angeles
Highest score with discretion of considering all.

California Western University
Most recent if highest, otherwise averaged.

Campbell University
We generally use the highest score; however, we do consider each individual score and any explanation offered for the lower score.

Capital University
Will consider highest score; generally, for three or more scores, the average is used. Explanations for differences welcome.
Benjamin N. Cardozo (Yeshiva)
Review all scores, may give highest consideration to high LSAT.
Case Western Reserve University(142,530),(272,543)
Consider highest score, but all scores reviewed.
(Catholic University of America)
Consider highest score, but all scores are reviewed.

Chapman University Fowler School of Law
The ABA has changed the rule regarding the reporting of the highest of multiple LSAT scores, however, this does not change the review process. If the candidate has taken the LSAT multiple times, the Committee will review all of the LSAT scores. From an admissions perspective, the average score may be the best indication of an applicant’s success. It is advisable for the applicant to explain why one score is more indicative of his or her likelihood of success. For merit scholarship purpose, we will utilize the high LSAT SCORE.

Charleston School of Law
Highest score considered.

University of Chicago
We review all scores, however for reporting purposes we use high LSAT.

Chicago–Kent College of Law
If the LSAT is taken more than once, the Admissions Committee may consider the average score, the more recent score or the higher score, depending on individual circumstances. Preference is typically given to the highest score earned.

University of Cincinnati
Use highest score.

City University of New York (CUNY) School of Law
Consider all scores, with some weight being given to highest.

Cleveland—Marshall
Only highest score considered.

University of Colorado
Consider and review all scores, but high LSAT score is used when reporting.

Columbia University
The Committee considers the entire LSAT testing history when evaluating applications for admission.

Concordia University School of Law
Generally accept highest LSAT score.

University of Connecticut
All scores are considered however, the high LSAT score is used when reporting.

Cornell University
Consider highest score, but all scores reviewed. Explanations for differences are suggested.

Creighton University
Use higher score unless there is reason to discount one.

University of Dayton
Generally accept highest, although all scores are considered.

University of Denver
Generally accept highest, although all scores are considered.

DePaul University College of Law
We will consider the high score.

University of Detroit Mercy
We review all scores.

University of the District of Columbia School of Law
Consider highest score, but all scores are reviewed.

Drake University
Consider highest score, but all scores reviewed.

Duke University
Will consider higher score or average, depending on circumstances and the overall context of the application. An addendum is suggested when there is a significant difference between test scores.

Duquesne University
Consider the highest score, but all scores are reviewed.

Elon University
Highest Score considered.

Emory University
The highest LSAT score is used.

University of Florida
Review all scores. Candidates should discuss score differences.

Florida Coastal School of Law
Florida Coastal School of Law uses the highest score.

Florida International University
Only the applicant’s highest LSAT score is considered.

Stetson University College of Law
Stetson takes the highest score. Extenuating circumstances are taken into consideration.

Syracuse University
Syracuse Law will still review all LSAT scores in the overall evaluation process. The student’s HIGHEST LSAT attempt is the score that will be calculated with the cumulative GPA to determine the index number and is the score generally used to make a decision.

Temple University Beasley School of Law
Temple University Beasley School of Law will consider the high LSAT score, although all LSAT scores are reviewed and applicants should provide a written explanation if there is a significant difference between one or more LSAT scores.

University of Tennessee
We look at the highest score, but all test scores are reviewed. Students are encouraged to submit an addendum if they would like to explain a change in LSAT score.

University of Texas
We review all scores but will take the highest score.

Texas A&M University School of Law
The Admissions Committee will consider all reported scores and give greater weight to the highest score.

Texas Tech University
1–5 point span, we use highest; over 5 points, we use the newest score.

Thomas M. Cooley
Consider only the highest score in our admission formula. Score must be within 5 years of application date.

Thomas R. Kline School of Law, Drexel University
The highest score is used.

University of Toledo
Highest score only.

Touro Law Center—Jacob D. Fuchsberg
Touro takes the higher/highest score (provide contextual information/addendum if there is a dramatic difference in scores).

Tulane University
Tulane looks at all scores, but relies on the applicant to explain why a higher score should be given more weight.

University of Tulsa
Take the Highest Score.

University of Utah
We will presumptively use the highest score. The reviewer, however, may use the average score if information in the file indicate that the score is the most appropriate measure of the candidates skills.

Valparaiso University
Highest score.

Vanderbilt Law School
Readers consider all scores and their average.

Vermont Law School
Take highest score.

Villanova University
The Admissions Committee will consider the high LSAT score, although all LSAT scores are reviewed and applicants should provide a written explanation if there is a significant difference between one or more LSAT scores.

University of Virginia
Highest score.

Wake Forest University
We average if test taken more than twice.

Washburn University School of Law
We review all scores but will take the highest.

University of Washington
Review all score information available. Highest score is considered for reporting purposes.

Washington and Lee University
Will consider explanation for widely disparate scores

Washington University School of Law
For admittance and scholarship purposes, students are evaluated based on their highest LSAT score. However, all scores are reviewed so vast discrepancies should be explained.

J. PREFERRED MEANS OF RECEIVING LETTERS OF RECOMMENDATION

Each law school was asked to indicate its preferred means of receiving letters of recommendation. The four options listed below were offered. The list indicates preferences of schools responding.

1. We accept those letters of recommendation which have been processed through the Law Services Letters of Recommendation Services.
2. We prefer that students use the Law Services Letter of Recommendation Services but do accept letters directly from the recommender or the undergraduate institutions' credential service.
3. We prefer letters which come directly from the recommender or the undergraduate institution’s credential service but do accept letters from the Law Service Letter of Recommendation Service.
4. We have no preference.

L. SCHOOLS USING A FORMULA IN THE ADMISSIONS PROCESS

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

These schools indicated that a formula is used for pre-sorting and as an aid in determining the process for considering the file but not for determining the decision.

The specific formula used by a law school is provided in cases where that information is available.

<td>As a public law school, the University of California, Hastings College of the Law has a responsibility to educate lawyers who will serve the legal needs of all members of society. Hastings seeks each year to enroll students whose intellect, experience, creativity, and personal character will enable them successfully to complete their own legal education, contribute to the education of their classmates, and become accomplished lawyers who serve the needs of the public through the practice of law, the formulation of public policy, legal scholarship, and other professional endeavors. Because numeric criteria do not necessarily indicate whether an applicant will meet or contribute to these goals, Hastings considers a variety of non numeric criteria. These criteria include letters of recommendation, academic honors and awards, the rigor and difficulty of the applicant's undergraduate and graduate education, communications skills, work experience, public service, and significant achievement in other nonacademic activities. Hastings also considers whether the applicant is among the first in his or her family to attend college, is a member of groups that historically have been underrepresented in law school and the legal profession, or has experienced significant medical, personal, educational, or other adversity.</td>

<td>Regent University School of Law</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>No new three year programs, but we added a new Two-Year Accelerated Program-launching May 2013. Students save considerable time and living expenses while earning the same academically rigorous Regent legal education taught from a Christian worldview. Students will enter the job market one year sooner than students in a traditional 3-year program. Students study full-time for six consecutive terms by starting in late May as opposed to mid-August. After the first summer, accelerated program students are integrated into the same classes as all other law students, studying the same curriculum under the same professors as enjoyed by students in the traditional three-year program. Students will experience a law-practice externship as a part of the Accelerated Program. Due to a rigorous schedule, students will have less opportunity for extracurricular activities and summer employment. Requires at least a 152 LSAT, a 3.0 cumulative UGPA, and other indicators of high academic promise. Applications and supporting documents should be submitted via the LSAC website. Priority consideration date for the two-year program is January 15. Late applications are considered on a space-available basis. Students admitted to the program must submit an enrollment agreement and seat deposit no later than April 1. It is recommended that applicants take the October or December LSAT preceding the desired June enrollment. Applicants must submit an addendum in their application addressing their reasons for seeking enrollment in an accelerated, rigorous program of study. The admissions committee will be looking for a commitment to disciplined, intensive legal study.</td>

Regardless of the size of our applicant pool, our Academic Success Program is available to students throughout their legal education, first year through graduation and bar preparation. The Academic Success Program includes workshops and individual tutorial options. Detailed information is available at the law school website.

No, we have in place the Academic Skills Program and a robust academic counseling and tutor program.

We proactively reach out to students through First Year workshops, practice problems, and individualized attention. At risk students are given additional opportunities to correct deficiencies through the Academic Support Office and the Center for Legal Writing.

Hiring new full-time Director of Bar Preparation and Clinical Professor of Law to assist with bar prep and academic success. Required academic success class in fall and spring of first-year, and upper class law tutors available fall & spring.

We have an Academic Excellence Program for several years now. You can learn more about the program at www.nesl.edu/academics-faculty/academic-support

We continue to have many resources through our Dean of Students and dean of Academic affairs offices devoted to all students to help them be successful at Pitt Law.

If by retention rate, you mean yield rate, and we believe students will be influenced by scholarship offers more than ever before. We have increased our awards and will expand the opportunities for students to visit our campus with lodging, and in many cases, travel assistance to give them a better understanding of our programs and their fit within our community.

We already offer an academic assistance program with an advanced start for students who might benefit from additional academic support. This is not a PBAP. Students who participate in the summer assistance program are expected to continue in August.

At this time we do not anticipate any problems with our retention rate. We already have support in place for students to help them achieve success academically including an academic support program. We also provide midterms to our students in most first year classes. Offering midterms helps our students to determine if they need additional academic support mid-semester.

Over the last three years, our admissions standards have become more competitive, and the statistical indicators of our entering classes have increased. Our bar prep assistance is available to graduates through our Academic Support program.

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>a) Résumé</td>
<td>Required. The résumé should reflect all full-time and part-time employment, both paid and unpaid, and all extracurricular activities and honors. Please format your résumé in reverse chronological order, with the most recent employment at the top and indicate for each position whether it was full-time, part-time, paid, or unpaid. Please do not include high school activities or awards in your résumé. There is no required length for the résumé. Occasionally, the Admissions Committee will request further clarification of an applicant's activities.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>b) Personal Statement</td>
<td>Required. Most are approximately two pages long, double-spaced. Your personal statement should discuss the significant personal, social, or academic experiences that have contributed to your decision to study law.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c) Diversity Statement</td>
<td>Optional. This essay is your opportunity to discuss any aspect of your background or life experience that you believe will enhance your ability to contribute to the diverse BU classroom experience and community. BU Law values and recognizes the importance of diversity. An ethnically, socio-economically, and otherwise diverse class is essential to the education of each student. As a producer of leaders in legal practice, government or other public service, academia, and business, BU Law continues its long-standing tradition of providing opportunities for persons of all backgrounds and providing the excellent training to which a diverse classroom is indispensable.</td>

- b) Personal Statement: Required—Applicants are required to provide a personal statement as part of their Application for Admission. Personal statements must be typed double-spaced, using a 12-point font. Optimal length is four pages, but the number of pages is optional. Applicants should address each of the points below, in order of preference. In addition, applicants may wish to present information regarding family background, educational opportunities, financial resources, etc., that may have affected their academic performance or test scores. Applicants should address these 5 points in their personal statement:
  1. Calling: Why do you want to be a lawyer? Describe your personal and professional goals.
  2. Mission: Explain your reasons for applying to Liberty University School of Law. Include your perspective on faith, life, and morality, and why the law school’s distinct mission is attractive to you.
  3. Talents: Share any personal talents, strengths, character traits, and interests that contribute to your preparation to study and practice law.
  4. Experience: What educational, employment, and life experiences have contributed to your preparation for the study of law? (Scholastic, civic, and professional honors or awards may be cited here or in your optional resumé.)
  5. Influences: Discuss particular factors that have had a significant impact on your personal, professional, or spiritual growth, or your vision for the future.
- c) Diversity Statement: n/a.
- d) Unique Statement for your school: See personal statement requirements.
- e) Additional Essays:
- f) Letters of Recommendation: Required. Two letters of recommendation are required. One recommendation (preferably from a faculty advisor or professor in major field of study) should address applicant’s academic performance and abilities. If the applicant has been out of school for several years or has served in the military, a letter from an employer or commanding officer is appropriate. The second recommendation should be a character reference from someone who has personal knowledge of the applicant’s integrity. Letters of recommendation from family members or from “VIPs” lacking personal knowledge of you are of no value. Recommenders may send letters to the Law School Admission Council (LSAC) or directly to the School of Law Office of Admissions.
- g) Addenda—areas of content: n/a.

MORE FAQs

Specific Course Questions

1. In addition to the 1L writing and research requirements, are there other writing requirements beyond the first year?
2. Is there a “lawyering,” practical skills course included at some point in course of study? If so, when and what is covered in the course?
3. Does your school offer a bar preparation course? If so, when? Is it mandatory?

ALBANY LAW SCHOOL

Q1. Yes. There is an upper-level writing requirement where students must produce a substantial legal research paper prior to graduation. This requirement may be met in various ways including but not limited to: faculty supervised research, publication in a student-edited journal, or the completion of a course that satisfies the writing requirement.

Q2. Yes. “Introduction to Lawyering” is taken in the first semester for all new students. The course combines legal research, legal writing, clinical methodology, and professional skills development to introduce what lawyers do and how the legal system works. Students also represent a plaintiff or defendant in a simulated lawsuit, from initial client interview to appeal.

Q3. Yes. Bar exam preparation and support is comprehensive. There are courses directly related to bar preparation that are offered in the 2L and 3L years. All students must take a diagnostic exam after their first year. If they score below median, they must take Legal Analysis I—a course designed as a bridge between 1L doctrinal courses and preparing for the bar exam as a 3L. This course is not required if they score above the median on the diagnostic, but it is available to all 2L students. There is also a Legal Analysis II which is made available to all students in their final semester, but it is not mandatory. Legal Analysis II uses former bar exam questions and is designed as a direct segue from law school to full participation in a commercial bar review course. All graduating students are offered a bar coach and provided opportunities for individual appointments, essay and performance test workshops, as well as opportunities to practice with former essay graders for the New York Board of Law Examiners. Faculty members host daily Q&A lunches during the months preceding the February and July bar exams where students are invited to have a meal and ask questions that may be raised by their commercial bar preparation courses.

UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS SCHOOL OF LAW

Q1. Yes. Every student is required to complete at least 2 credit hours of upper level writing coursework. ULW courses are certified by the faculty as meeting relevant ABA standards.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA—LOS ANGELES

Q1. Yes. Students must undertake a Substantial Analytic Writing (SAW) project during their second or third year of law school.

Q2. Yes. Students take Legal Research and Writing during their first year, which focuses on practice-oriented legal analysis. During this yearlong course students develop the analytic skill set needed by practicing lawyers and desired by legal employers. Students are introduced to fundamentals of legal reasoning, the structure of objective and persuasive arguments, effective written analysis, legal research methods, statutory interpretation, compelling oral advocacy, fact investigation, client counseling, and negotiation. These analytic skills are taught using the clinical method, with the client’s perspective firmly in mind and with the students learning by acting as lawyers. By learning how to function as practicing lawyers, students can succeed in their summer jobs, and in their careers when they graduate.

Q3. No, however, UCLA Law offers regular academic courses covering material that is tested on the bar exam including Business Associations, Civil Procedure, Community Property, Constitutional Law, Contracts, Criminal Law and Procedure, Evidence, Professional Responsibility, Real Property, Remedies, Torts, Trusts and Wills and Succession. ## DICKINSON LAW

Q1. Dickinson Law requires students to take Problem Solving 3: The Lawyer As Persuader, a persuasive writing course, in the first semester of their second year. Additionally, students are required to take a writing intensive seminar in any of the final three semesters of law school.

Q2. Yes, Dickinson Law requires 1Ls to take a 3–credit course called Legal Argument & Factual Persuasion, which is offered in the first semester of the first year of law school. This course systematically introduces how lawyers develop a legal argument using a) case precedents, and b) statutes, including various interpretive tools beyond the language of the statute. The course also will instruct how to find these authorities through legal research. Students also will learn the very different protocol a lawyer uses when attempting the persuade the judge or jury to accept her version of disputed facts, culminating in every student presenting a closing argument to the jury.

Q3. Yes, Dickinson Law offers a bar preparation course (Fundamental Skills for the Bar Examination) in the final semester of law school. While open to all third year students, this course is mandatory for students who rank in the bottom quarter of their law school class after the second semester of law school and who earned a grade below C in any first-year course.

ELON LAW

Q1. Elon Law has an upper-level writing requirement, which must be completed by all law students during their second or third year as a graduation requirement. The goals of the upper-level writing requirement are: (1) to further develop students’ basic writing and research skills; (2) to provide students with an opportunity to analyze, synthesize, and organize a substantial body of knowledge; and (3) to provide students with an opportunity for in-depth engagement in a narrow legal subject area. A student satisfies the requirement by completing one or more written projects that require rigorous intellectual effort. Projects must be completed under the active and regular supervision of a faculty member who provides instruction, guidance, and feedback on the student’s work, and who is available for individual meetings to discuss the student’s progress toward successful completion of the requirement. The requirement can be met by writing, among other things, a scholarly paper, a law review note or comment, legal briefs or memoranda, or other legal documents. Beyond this requirement, many students complete rigorous writing projects in activities such as law review, moot court and numerous courses where a paper is required.

Q2. Each Elon Law student takes Lawyering, Leadership & Professionalism, which considers three aspects in the development of competent, leading lawyers: exercising problem-solving lawyering skills, developing a professional identity that guides students’ selected career paths, and exhibiting professionalism as an active member of the bar and officer of the court. Together, these three components coalesce to provide a sound foundation for the acquisition and refinement of legal skills and support development of a competitive legal career. This approach enhances the learning experience for students while reinforcing that excellence in knowing the law and basic exposure to expert application of the law are essential personal priorities and critical outcomes from legal education.

Q3. Elon Law students take a required Bar Exam Foundations course during their final trimester. The course is designed to help students maximize their performance on the bar exam in their jurisdiction of choice. In addition to reviewing and organizing critical bar-tested topics and to assisting students develop expert study strategies, the course focuses on the tactics and strategies for writing essay answers and taking multiple choice tests. Topics include Contracts, Torts, Property, Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure, Civil Procedure, Evidence, Constitutional Law, Professional Responsibility, Property, Family Law, Wills and Trusts, and Secured Transactions. Students in the course answer numerous essay, multiple choice and multistate performance test questions, and they also take a simulated bar examination. In addition to this required course, Elon Law offers several elective courses designed to prepare students for the bar examination.
